Case Study

OnTour was distributed natively on both Dell and HP computers. With installations reaching well over 3.5 simultaneous active users, insuring scalability was my primary concern. As each client made several web services calls during a typical user session, scaling centered on application performance, database performance and edge caching of data.

Equally challenging was the aggregation of multiple data feeds into a single distinct dataset. As each feed could potentially each have the same event, fuzzy logic was employed to mitigate the presence of duplicates.
